

Back in July 2011, we ran an article on an aspiring pre-teen rock band from Salida named Ironically Charged (Issue # 209). Since that time they've changed their name to Red Bandana and recorded an album, Finally. The band decided to save all of the money from their gigs over this past summer and shoot a video that represents what they do on stage. A team of 23 crew members from five different local and regional production companies were assembled at the Salida SteamPlant. A custom stage with risers was built, 11 high-definition cameras were employed – including over 70 feet of truss with a state-of-the-art, computerized light show – and a digital sound system captured the performance while being operated from the audience on an iPad. The four middle-school girls performed eight songs for an audience of 180+ enthusiastic fans, ranging in age from 2-82. The live video should be edited and ready to check out by Christmas at www.redbandana.com, according to their manager, Bones. Photo by Dave Kirchner.
